

I was born in Paris in 1975 and I spent my childhood moving around France and Germany. I went to different schools in different places and when I was a teenager I moved back to Paris where I went to the International School of Saint-Germain-en-Laye (German section). From this moment I knew that learning languages was my passion. I studied German, Educational Sciences and French as a Foreign Language in Paris, Aix-en-Provence and Nancy.

I had my first teaching experiences in Germany, then in Portugal, in France and in Estonia. Ambassadors, civil servants, artists, businessmen, pupils, nursery children, university students, teenagers, CEOs, soldiers, disabled people... these are the people who have taught me how to adapt myself to different teaching situations. This is how I learned (because teachers also learn!) to value good mood and humor while teaching, but all this in a rigorous frame.

My second passion is street art and contemporary painting. Art, and also music, feed my soul and stimulate my creativity at work, with my family and friends.
